

PRIVACY POLICY

POLICY STATEMENT

The privacy provisions of the Privacy Act 1988 (Cth) affecting private sector organisations including the Western Region Academy of Sport (WRAS) which came into effect on 21 December, 2001 protects personal privacy by establishing rules for collecting, using and archiving personal information. People will now be able to access personal information that organisations hold on them and correct it if it is wrong. Individuals who feel their privacy has been invaded can lodge a complaint and expect action to be taken to resolve the situation. The new law provides for financial compensation.

This legislation does not intend to prevent the collecting of personal information; it merely aims to make organisations more transparent about why they are collecting personal information and what they are doing with it and to limit their use and disclosure of collected personal information.

Employee records are exempt from the provisions of the Act. This exemption however does not apply to contractors, workers on secondment, and employees from a related company whose records are kept on the premises, or to prospective employees.
